Abstract

The growth of the firm is often financed through retained earnings. Entrepreneurs looking to expand, make new investments, or pay off debt using free cash flows from the business. However, entrepreneurs in farming business derive income from an enterprise that has variable income and farm program payments provided by the government helps smooth income and consumption. Using national-farm level data (2008-2013) and free cash modelling approach we study how government commodity support (decoupled, coupled
