Introduction

The library of the Spanish Academy of Dermatology and Venereology (AEDV) played a key role in the association from its founding until the end of the 20th century. With the introduction of computers and new audiovisual media, the physical library gradually lost some of its earlier importance. In fact, digitized bibliographic indexes and online journal distribution systems have nearly completely displaced physical access. At present only some of the library's old volumes or some of the early articles of Actas Derma-sifiliográficas (Actas) excite dermatologists' curiosity.

When the AEDV moved from Calle Sandoval in Madrid to a new address on Calle Ferraz in December 1993, the library was discovered to have lost many of its books. In addition, materials stored in a basement were found to be in such poor condition from the effects of inappropriate storage and damp that some were beyond repair. These materials are currently being classified and cataloged.

The AEDV's library (Fig. 1) at present holds over 700 volumes related to dermatology, many of which exclusively deal with venereal diseases. On the occasion of the library's move to the premises of the Olavide Museum this year, the academy's board of directors also approved a new name: the Professor García Pérez Library of the AEDV. Bibliographic details for all the current holdings are being input into a digitized cataloging system at the new location.

The Library, According to Actas and the AEDV's Charters

The first dermatological association (called the Sociedad Dermatológica) was created on May 6, 1909, under the leadership of Dr Juan de Azúa Suárez. On its first board of directors were Drs Manuel Sanz Bombín, as honorary president, Azúa himself as the active president, Antonio Pardo Regidor as vice president, José Sánchez Covisa as general secretary, and Miguel Serrano, as the first librarian and also treasurer. The combination of the positions of librarian—or historian, under the title "librarian-historian"—and treasurer would continue throughout the nomination of 18 persons to fill this post (Table 1). Dr A. García Pérez, president of the AEDV in 1985, published regulations for using the library, including its journals.<sup>1</sup> His article was the only one about the library ever to appear in Actas.

However, in the published 1926 version of the charter and bylaws, at a time when the association was called the Spanish Academy of Dermatology and Syphilography, the library and its regulations were mentioned in Chapter VI.<sup>2</sup> Article 25 stated that “the library shall be located in the College of Physicians, and the necessary purchases of material and furnishings shall be made.” (The College of Physicians was on Calle Esparteros, number 11, at that time.) Later charters we consulted were never published in Actas.

Curiously, the library’s copy of the 1926 publication of the charter contains handwritten drafts of a number of amendments to several articles, all dated 1928. Some of them refer to an assistant to the librarian. These amendments suggest that there may exist other charters dated after 1926 and before 1932 in which those changes were recorded even though for some unknown reason they were not incorporated into the 1932 charter. The annotations also refer to payments made to other assistants employed by the AEDV.

The 1932 charter and bylaws<sup>3</sup> state that “the library will be domiciled in the Olavide Dispensary at Calle Sandoval, number 5, and will remain open from 6 to 9 PM on all working days.”

The charter and bylaws of 1935<sup>4</sup> continue to put the library at the same location, and there is a new bylaw with a very complete set of “internal regulations for the library of the Spanish Academy of Dermatology and Syphilography.” That bylaw has a total of 30 articles explaining how the library worked. Among them we highlight the following:

Article 22: “. . .It is considered a moral obligation that all members of the academy will hereafter provide at least one copy of all books or pamphlets they publish about the specialty.”

Article 23: “This obligation shall be extended to include previous publications, as far as is possible.”

Article 25: “A letter shall be sent to all medical publishers in Spain and abroad making known the opening of this section.”

Articles 26 through 29 state that if a publisher sends a single copy of a book to the library, a “note” indicating the author, title, number of pages, publisher, and price will be published in Actas. If 2 copies are received and the book is deemed sufficiently important to merit further attention, the aforementioned “note” will be published, as usual, and the first copy will enter the library directly while the second will be sent to a member commissioned by the board of directors to write a review of the book for publication.

In 1966, the board of directors presided over by Dr Álvarez Lovell, with Dr Rodríguez Puchol as general secretary, issued a more succinct charter in which neither the library nor a librarian were mentioned. This board also passed a bylaw describing the functions of the library and its location at the headquarters of the AEDV (then at Calle Sandoval, number 7, where the official [Olavide] dermatology dispensary was also located).

We found no charters later than the one of 1966 until those of 1989 and 1993,<sup>5,6</sup> where the library is said to have
