

Highlights

- This study employs fear-based theorizing to explore online privacy concerns.
- Self-control was associated with the decreased Internet scam victimization.
- Routine Internet activities predicted increased Internet scam victimization.
- Internet scam victimization was associated with increased online privacy concerns.
- Online privacy concerns predicted elevated privacy protection behaviors.

Download English Version:

<https://daneshyari.com/en/article/4937299>

Download Persian Version:

<https://daneshyari.com/article/4937299>

Daneshyari.com