

On behalf of the Annals Editorial Board, the Editor in Chief gratefully acknowledges the significant contributions of Annals' corps of peer reviewers. Last year, our reviewers completed more than 2,000 reviews of submissions to the journal. The quality of peer review determines both the quality of our journal and the quality of science in general, and is therefore a crucial step in the refinement of scientific knowledge. Our reviewers donate their time and talents to improve the science of our specialty. This is an important scholarly pursuit, and we encourage our reviewers to list this accomplishment on their curriculum vitae and when seeking academic promotion.

Although we are grateful for the efforts of all our reviewers, we are especially pleased to announce the names of our top peer reviewers, who are chosen based on a formula assessing review quality, promptness, and the volume of reviews performed. There are 50 of them, and they represent the highest level of achievement in critical analysis of scientific research. Similarly, we perform a corresponding assessment of reviewers newly appointed to the journal, and wish to acknowledge 9 whose performance placed them in the top 10% of all reviewers recruited to the journal in 2014.*

The publication of a leading peer-reviewed journal requires considerable effort from many individuals. Annals owes a debt of recognition and gratitude to all who contribute to the continuing success of the journal.
