Highlights

- Actions related to tourism development are relatively often also related to sustainable development, although it is sometimes the case that some local government officials do not understand this concept.
- In the realm of tourism development, the diversity of the stakeholders is significant and they act to defend their interests and often contrasting goals.
- The level of agreement between groups of stakeholders increases, so does the likelihood of collaboration and compromise.
- Collaboration with the academic community needs to be enhanced, as frequently it is described as inadequate. Some local government officials go as far as to claim that academic leaders do not collaborate with local governments at all.
