Highlights

- The knowledge of the satisfaction level of the admitted patients is of great importance for the improvement of the quality of the sanitary services. Although there are a number of interesting articles regarding this topic, they do not focus on the inpatient perspective. The Satipsy-22-E shows good metric properties and it's a good tool available now in Spanish language, allowing learning more about inpatients' real needs. We hope this way we will all be able to improve our clinical practice.
- Some of the intervening variables are specific to psychiatric wards. Involuntary income, constraining and similar topics related to the restrictive measures of these wards produce a differential effect when evaluating the admission experience.
