HIGHLIGHTS

- Generic drugs which are equivalent to the original drugs and are allowing access to the same medical outcomes at lower costs often play a part of drug expenditure control policies.
- Between 2007 and 2012, while consumption of prescribed drugs in the hypertension group increased about 63%, hypertension drug expenditures of SSI increased almost 82% in Turkey
- This results showed that the pricing and reimbursement policies for generic drugs need to change, especially internal reference pricing system should be redesigned in Turkey.
- The results of this study can provide important benefits for drug economy studies in Turkey. The pharmaceutical economy in Turkey is a discipline that is beginning to develop.
