

Author's Accepted Manuscript

Hip preservation surgery – Can we change the natural history of osteoarthritis?

Adam Hart, Joshua S. Bingham, Juan S. Vargas, Rafael J. Sierra

www.elsevier.com/locate/bios

PII: S1045-4527(18)30001-4
DOI: <https://doi.org/10.1053/j.sart.2018.02.001>
Reference: YSART50787

To appear in: Seminars in Arthroplasty

Cite this article as: Adam Hart, Joshua S. Bingham, Juan S. Vargas and Rafael J. Sierra, Hip preservation surgery – Can we change the natural history of osteoarthritis?, Seminars in Arthroplasty, doi:10.1053/j.sart.2018.02.001

This is a PDF file of an unedited manuscript that has been accepted for publication. As a service to our customers we are providing this early version of the manuscript. The manuscript will undergo copyediting, typesetting, and review of the resulting galley proof before it is published in its final citable form. Please note that during the production process errors may be discovered which could affect the content, and all legal disclaimers that apply to the journal pertain.

Title: Hip Preservation Surgery – Can We Change the Natural History of Osteoarthritis?

Authors: Adam Hart, Joshua S. Bingham, Juan S. Vargas, Rafael J. Sierra

From: The Department of Orthopedic Surgery at the Mayo Clinic,

Address: 200 1st St SW, Rochester, MN 55902

Phone: 507-284-2511

Fax: 507-266- 0103

Adam Hart (MD, MASc, FRCSC)

Hart.adam@mayo.edu

Joshua S. Bingham (MD)

Bingham.joshua@mayo.edu

Juan S. Vargas (MD)

Vargas.juan@mayo.edu

Rafael J. Sierra (MD, ABOS)

Sierra.rafael@mayo.edu

Abstract

Structural abnormalities of the hip including developmental dysplasia (DDH) and femoroacetabular impingement (FAI) are a predominant cause of primary osteoarthritis. While affected patients may have significant pain and functional limitations, many may remain asymptomatic and will likely

Download English Version:

<https://daneshyari.com/en/article/8804062>

Download Persian Version:

<https://daneshyari.com/article/8804062>

Daneshyari.com