This is a PDF file of an unedited manuscript that has been accepted for publication. As a service to our customers we are providing this early version of the manuscript. The manuscript will undergo copyediting, typesetting, and review of the resulting proof before it is published in its final form. Please note that during the production process errors may be discovered which could affect the content, and all legal disclaimers that apply to the journal pertain.

Highlights

- Psychiatry outpatients in substance use treatment for depression were studied.
- Medical marijuana use at baseline was associated with worse functioning scores.
- Non-medical use at baseline was associated with high symptoms and worse functioning.
- Non-medical use over time was associated with less clinical outcome improvement.
- Addressing marijuana-related barriers in depression could help improve outcomes.
