

Accepted Manuscript

Title: Killing me slowly: harsh environment extends plant maximum life span

Authors: Sergey Rosbakh, Peter Poschlod

PII: S1439-1791(17)30203-7
DOI: <https://doi.org/10.1016/j.baae.2018.03.003>
Reference: BAAE 51095

To appear in:

Received date: 7-7-2017
Revised date: 10-3-2018
Accepted date: 10-3-2018

Please cite this article as: Rosbakh, Sergey., and Poschlod, Peter., Killing me slowly: harsh environment extends plant maximum life span. Basic and Applied Ecology <https://doi.org/10.1016/j.baae.2018.03.003>

This is a PDF file of an unedited manuscript that has been accepted for publication. As a service to our customers we are providing this early version of the manuscript. The manuscript will undergo copyediting, typesetting, and review of the resulting proof before it is published in its final form. Please note that during the production process errors may be discovered which could affect the content, and all legal disclaimers that apply to the journal pertain.

Killing me slowly: harsh environment extends plant maximum life span

Running headline: plant maximum life span along an elevational gradient

Sergey Rosbakh* and Peter Poschlod

University of Regensburg, Ecology and Nature Conservation Biology, Institute of Plant Sciences, D-93040 Regensburg, Germany

*Corresponding author. Tel.: +49-941-943-3105; fax: +49-941-943-3106.

E-mail address: sergey.rosbakh@ur.de.

Abstract

Life span (the age of death for individuals that survived the establishment phase) is a key trait in plant life history. Despite its importance for understanding plant-environment relationships, there are still numerous substantial knowledge gaps about variation in plant maximum life spans and the ecological processes underlying these patterns.

Download English Version:

<https://daneshyari.com/en/article/8847007>

Download Persian Version:

<https://daneshyari.com/article/8847007>

Daneshyari.com